Inverse lighting techniques allow to obtain the unknown light sources parameters, such as light position or flux emission, from desired lighting intentions. In this paper we present a new inverse lighting technique that uses the statistical mean and variance of the illuminated scene to obtain optimal solutions for a given lighting intention. This technique allows to explore a huge number of full radiosity solutions in a short time, reducing in this way drastically the optimization time required.

http://dx.doi.org/10.1109/CADGraphics.2013.47